
"There is danger from all men. The only maxim of a free government ought to be to trust no man living with power to endanger the public liberty."

John Adams was the Second President of the United States, revolutionary statesman and signer of the Declaration of Independence.